Morning smashed greyly on an uneasy ocean, a timid sun shining from behind a shallow covering of clouds. Soaring gracefully above the restless waves were three seagulls wearing bowler hats. They fluttered skittishly into the supposed security of a wandering thorn bush, and were strangled by a rose wearing hip boots. I won't bury them.

History is what you remember, and if you don't think it's being revised all the time, you haven't paid enough attention to your own memory. When you remember something, you don't remember the thing itself — you just remember the last time you remembered it.
